

Digital Artist

You're an artist, an animator and maybe even part architect.

You're more than proficient with the technology and toys the cool kids play with—you invent 'em. (Or aspire to, and for now, know how to use 'em really, really well.)

We've created a new role for a real, live, HD, creatively technical and technically creative, pro. You're joining a team of innovators and designers, and will be mentored by our Technology Innovator who has double digit years of international experience, doing really cool stuff, like printing 3D rifles for movies or creating games for AAA companies.

At Waterplay, we're in the business of play, and we're in the business of making it possible for everyone to play. That is our reason for being, and every Waterplayer takes pride in knowing what we do makes kids smile.

What makes you different, and makes us different, is a passion to create. A passion to create playful experiences accessible for everyone. At Waterplay, you'll truly be making a difference for your community, with visible and lasting impact for multiple releases of Waterplayers (aka future generations).

Depending on the day, you might be the Marketing group's visual designer for a multi-media campaign, and the next, you're updating the inventory of digital assets because our Engineering group modified an element found in hundreds of our products.

When your coworkers compliment you for perfect lighting and composition from a photoshoot and are rendered speechless when they realized they're admiring your latest rendering, you can revel in a good day's work.

Being curious, creative and self-directed, motivated by "What if?", yet also respectful, reliable and self-aware of your limits and when to seek feedback and advice are all useful skills for this role.

In the past two years (or so) you've become really good at modelling, better than decent at animation, and have retained your passion for gaming, because you know that's where virtually anything is possible.

We're grateful for everyone who invests time and energy to apply and will contact those who we're keen to learn more about.
